Williams, of Fiorida, who was formerly an officer of Gen. Cobb's staff, and Bishop Beckwith, of Georgia. Mr. Cobb stopped to introduce Mr. Beckwith to his wife, and engaged in conversation relative to a sermon recently preached by the Bishop. They had conversed but a short time, when Mr. Cobb turned to address his wife; but, without uttering any thing, put his hand to his head, swoon and sat down upon the step. Mrs. Cubb knowing the constitution of her husband thought it was an attack of vertigo, and expected he would soon revive. Col Williams, however, saw instantly that he was seriously ill, and hastened to get a physician. Dr. Rupanner, the hotel physician, was quickly on hand, and had Mr. Coob comoved to the reception room, where he rectined upon a sofa, breathed very hard and foamed at the mouth, while his face was livid and his eyes sunken. The puise at the wrist was entirely stopped, and the beatings of the heart feeble. In twenty minutes he was dead, without having uttered a word or made a sign of recognition. The terrible and unexpected blow to the wife and daughter was almost too much for them bear, and all day they were overwheimed with grief, while the occur-rence seemed to cast a gloom over every one present at the hotel. Everything was done to comfort the afflicted reistives, and Mr. Griswold, of the hotel, gave all his time to them, and dispatched the sad intelligence by telegraph to a large number of relatives and friends of the deceased living in all parts of the country. Mr. Cobb was aged fifty-three years one mouth and two days, and his place of residence was at Athens, Ga. He leaves four sons, John, Lamar, Howell and Andre; and three daughters, Mary Ann, who was present with him, and two younger. He was a very large man, of fine form and features.
